

Artists Statement

“Set No Boundaries”

When creating my art there are no set boundaries of imagination or what materials I need to use to accomplish the final product. When I'm working on a new piece, I put all my imagination and surprises into a one-of-a-kind treasure. Although my purpose is to combine parts and pieces and fit things together, I always have a finished idea in mind before I begin. Some artists' work looks like it was done haphazardly. Not true. Every piece is technically and emotionally created with a definite “end” in sight.

My art is not meant to follow specific ground rules nor the dictates of previous class techniques. Art classes are meant to make you think, to imagine what the idea can become. Classes give you choices and possibilities. The artist is responsible for bringing all this together for one final, satisfying work of art.

The results of ideas, choices, emotions, and other possibilities become what I love, my final creation. Whether in sculpture, painting, or any medium, I want the public to react with smiles, wonder, ask questions, and just enjoy it. Very simple.
